iphone And a cheater lite is pretty useless when what if you wanted to cheat at high scores? But there is a hack for it so the game can give them if the user gets good enough at it. And if it was cheating to exploit those, wouldn't they be free? And the whole thing where you get banned when they catch you isn't if you die for example in a game on your phone. If you die when playing on your home PC, it's less likely that people would bother you because you wouldn't be able to do anything about it besides getting a new PC. And I really don't understand the "my computer is my playstation" attitude. Even with a PC, your machine isn't as powerful and expensive as a PS3 is. You're not using the performance of a PS3 to download a game like you are a PS3. Then when you want to play the game, you're using a hard drive instead of a video card and therefore the power of your PC is going to end up just being wasted. Or in the case of a PS3, you can use your hard drive to load the game. The only thing that is tied to a hard drive is the data. And is the data that is tied to the hard drive just that? Couldn't someone rewrite the data onto a flash drive and put it in his laptop or something? If you still play games with discs, why would you buy anything other than an Xbox or PS3? I could still have the same experience on my laptop or computer as I do on my PS3. I can also play games on my PS2 or on a PS1 emulator on my PC or laptop. People use my games and free them to use as they please. No one owns them or paid for them and all that. I get to do whatever I want with them including letting people play them. And yet they use the "data is locked on the disc so no one can play it, except for me" argument. I see what you're saying. It is perfectly fine for me to do. All of the people that have just said it was "illegal" and that the hackers have been getting banned from the game just for testing out stuff is incorrect. You don't have to get banned. You can just keep playing and test stuff out. The only reason people have gotten banned is because they are the only 82157476af
